

The Invitation

All the neighbours said that the empty house up the road was haunted, so the three teenagers decided to explore. When they arrived, Mina and Dave went straight in through the open door but Terri hesitated. She was sure that this door had been locked and barred when she had walked by earlier that day. It almost seemed as if someone, or something, was inviting the three friends inside.

Terri was shaking nervously as she followed Mina and Dave into the empty house. Terri whispered, "I don't think we should be in here."

"We will be fine," called Mina. Dave repeated Mina's words.

"It might not be safe," whispered Terri.

"It is safe," replied Mina.

"How do you know?"

"OK I don't know."

"Let's just go in," called Dave.

Mina, Dave and Terri shakily walked into the empty house. There was a spooky atmosphere.

"Boo!"

Terri called, "I am not falling for that."

"It wasn't us."

"Who was it then?"

The three teenagers heard a scratching noise. It seemed to be coming from upstairs. They all looked at each other in fear. The scratching got louder and louder. The teenagers shivered with fright, they were terrified. Mina and Dave dashed upstairs with Terri following them, full of trepidation. There was a screech. The three teenagers shot back downstairs.

"Let's come back tomorrow," called Dave.

"Terri," shouted Mina and Dave.

"OK," shouted Mina and Dave.

A day later Mina and Dave went to Terri's house.

"Come on, stop being a baby," exclaimed Dave.

"There's nothing to be scared of," shouted Mina.

Terri came downstairs.

"It is scary though."

"No, it is not."

Terri ran upstairs to get dressed. She was a Goth so she got dressed in black and a bit of red. Mina and Dave were also Goths. They went back to the empty house. They walked in and the room was dark. A light was shining in the corner - a ghost shone up in the air.

"Whoo."

"Aaaaaa ghost," explained Mina.

"I told you we shouldn't be in here," stated Terri.

The three teenagers ran out of the empty house. Whenever the three teenagers passed the empty house they ran past nervously.
